Ⅱ 次の会話を完成させるため、(16)～(20) に当てはまる最も適切なものを選択肢の中から一つずつ選び、その番号で答えなさい。

Alex has recently graduated from college. He is talking to his older friend Jamie, who has been working in Toronto for several years now.

Jamie: Hi, Alex. What's going on? You don't look so good. (16)

Alex: Yeah, I feel so lost right now. I graduated with a degree in business, but I have no idea what to do next.

Jamie: I get it. (17) It can be overwhelming to decide on your next step.

Alex: Tell me about it. The worst part is that everyone keeps asking me about my plans, and I don't have an answer.

Jamie: Think about the things you like first. (18)

Alex: That's part of the problem. I like a lot of things. I can't pinpoint one specific job. I enjoy marketing, but I'm also interested in finance. And then there's the more creative side of me that likes things like graphic design.

Jamie: (19) Maybe you don't need to choose just one thing right now. Have you considered trying internships in different fields to see what you like best?

Alex: Actually, that sounds like a good idea. (20) I love video games.

Jamie: That sounds great! Why don't you apply for it? It might be a fun place to work.

Alex: Yeah, I'll do that. Thanks, Jamie. You really helped me out this time.

- 1 Do you like playing video games?
- 2 What kind of work do you enjoy doing?
- 3 I saw this ad for an internship at a game company downtown.
- 4 It's good that you have many different interests.
- 5 Are you worried about something?
- 6 I also had trouble deciding on a career path after I graduated.

Ⅲ 次の英文の (21)～(30) に入れるものとして最も適切な語を, (21)～(25) は α , (26)～(30) は β の中より一つ選び, その番号で答えなさい。(同じ語は一度しか用いることができません。)

The Atacama Desert in northern Chile is famous for its (21) rocky landscape and crystal-clear views of the night sky, making it a magnet for stargazing enthusiasts and even NASA. However, it has also become known for something less glamorous: becoming a dumping ground for (22) clothes due to the rise of fast fashion.

Fast fashion, the rapid production of cheap clothing, has led to a massive increase in clothing waste worldwide. Between 2000 and 2014, global clothing production (23), while consumers started buying 60% more clothes and wearing them for shorter periods. This has resulted in three-fifths of all clothing ending up in landfills or incinerators* within a year of production, causing an environmental and social (24).

*incinerators 焼却炉

The Atacama Desert has earned the nickname “the great fashion garbage patch” because of the large amount of abandoned clothes – with labels from all over the world – piled up across its landscape. These piles stretch for (25) outside Alto Hospicio, a city of 120,000 residents. The harsh sun bleaches the clothes, creating striking scenes of jeans, suit jackets, fake-fur coats, and dress shirts piled high, amid bottles, bags and other trash.

Images of these clothing heaps have shocked many Chileans, who hadn’t realized their country was becoming a dumping ground for textiles from (26) nations. The story behind this (27) is not just about passing fashion trends but also about globalization and trade.

Efforts to address the problem focus on (28) off the tap of fast fashion and promoting circular economic practices. By reducing clothing production, encouraging sustainable fashion choices, and finding (29) ways to reuse and (30) textiles, we can work towards lessening the environmental and social impacts of the fast fashion industry, both in Chile and around the world.

This passage is an edited version of John Bartlett and Tamara Merino, “Fast Fashion Goes to Die in the World’s Largest Fog Desert. The Scale Is Breathtaking.” Environment, 5 March 2024.
